

Albertine

A Brief History of Albertine

In December 1978 my mum, Sarah McEvedy, opened Albertine Wine Bar on the site of what had previously been a dodgy takeaway called “Box o’ Chicken”.

The idea was a simple one: francophile in feel, Old World wine and cranks-ish food. Their motivation was friends who worked at the BBC bemoaning the fact there was nowhere for them to have their long, boozy expense lunches: not only was there the enormous Television Centre (now flats) but Kensington House (now K West Hotel), Lime Grove (now also flats) and TV Theatre (now the O2 Shepherd’s Bush Empire); the current BBC White City was still a greyhound racing stadium.

My memories of coming here as a seven year old are all happy ones: going with my mum to a church reclamation yard to buy the pews that we all still sit on; walking up to Albertine from school, sitting on a high stool in the narrow galley kitchen and watching my mum cook in exactly the same spot as we do now.

Just a few years later though my mum sold Albertine to a young man who worked behind the bar with a keen interest in wine called Giles Phillips. His dedication, foresight and talent culminated in Albertine being the Evening Standard’s Wine Bar of The Year in 1997.

Over this time, Albertine’s relationship with the Beeb flourished into what we might now call codependency. The creators of Eastenders wrote their pitch here, were here when the first episode was broadcast and held script meetings in the bar for some years. Legend has it that Albert Square itself is named as an homage to Albertine.

When Giles called me towards the end of 2016 saying that after 37 years at the helm, he had decided to call time on his epic shift, I asked Roberto, a buddy and co-chef to be my partner and, shortly afterwards, we lasso’d in Paul, who was a lifelong friend of a lifelong friend of mine.

And so Albertine was given a lick of paint, and a new lease of life with a little restaurant at the first floor and a private party room at the top floor. We re-opened in February 2017 and I’ve never felt so at home anywhere.

And whilst it’s great that Rob, Paul & I are running it on behalf of our friends, family and the community at large, we all have a respectful, if slightly peculiar sense that she is also her own person, her own being and that with your help - Albertine will outlive all of us.

Allegra McEvedy
